The Wife Stealer.

Continued from Yesterday Evening's Times marry, and I have discovered the most beautiful girl imaginable for my wife. I want you to be present at the ceremony. This time I am not afraid that you will carry off my bride, for ten years have elapsed and you have now heat your power of fascination. Ten years ago I was a mere child and you were a man; to-day I am a man and you are getting well on into man and you are getting well on into childhood. Besides, my findee loves me with profound devotion. Therefore, if you wish me inppliess, come at once to my approaching wedding. DEMETER." These words inflamed Demeter III His pride was wounded. A wicked desire took possession of him, What sort of girl is this your master in tends to marry?" he inquired of the valet who had brought the letter. "A most lovely creature, sir," was the

"Is she young?"

"Do they love each other?" "Like a pair of doves."

Well, go back and tell my son that I shall be present at his wedding. Demeter III lost not a moment, but traveled post haste. Reaching Lemberg he there happened to meet his son's coachman. What are you doing here, Dimitru?" he nquired

The servant stammered and showed that he would like to ite, but a handful of gold propertly administered induced him to tell the truth. He said that his master got quite alarmed on bearing that the father did not mind taking the trouble of journeying to Podatia, and he had therefore arranged that the wedding should take place two days earlier, synding his concirman to Lemberg to bay certain Haugarian commodities for the marriage feast

Demeter III. leaped upon a swift horse, for his carriage was not quick enough, and gailoped furiously toward Podolia. Two orses fell beneath him and he arrived at the church just as the murriage was about to be sciencozed. He dismounted and the ceremony was interrupted in order that father and son might great each other, while the bride remained near the altar. She was covered with a thick veri which completely hid her features. Demeter HI. looked with proud contempt upon his con, where face was sunk with a firgering all-ment and from whose color it could be seen w many months be had to live, whereas e (the father) was cill vigorous and robust. Demoter IV, threw an imploring glance at his paternal relative, who simply received it with a smile and then walked up to the waiting bride and whispered in herear. Beautiful woman, I am Deinster Mark-off III, while that man is my son. His hands tremble; mine are steady. His are and Edward Castett; petition of Margaret and Edward O. Castett to be commisempty; mine are full of gold. Compare us together and choose which you will prefer to lead you to the altar."

Didora-such was the lady's name-made er decision with very little hesitation, and it was the father whom she allowed to take per to the altar and make her his wife. She swore to him eternal devotion. Demeter III was radiant with victory and glanced round the church to see what had become of his son. The latter was standing with his back ogniner a pillar, watching the ceremony from thence. He was not weep-ing, as on a former occasion.

As the party were leaving the church he whispered in his father's ear: "Good nck to you. Demeter III."

The elderly bridegroom took off the veil from the face of his bride. He beliefd, not a thing of beauty, but an ugly, crooked-mouthed, one-eyed horror-an object to very ogly that you could not find another like it on searched all over the earth. From this wife he could not escape so usily as from the others. He could not drive her away from him and she refused to lie. He lived with her till his own death. She was not afraid of his anger, for she could swear better than he. If he drank, so did Didora; if he attempted to beat her, the gave him a worse threshing in return. Demeter found it necessary to shave off his in every way. Father Noel was for many eard, otherwise Didora was fond of pulling it out for him. She insisted on accompanying him whenever he visited his friends quarret with him in their houses and exse him to the keenest ridicule. At length he decided never to go out of doors again, on.-Chicago News

bere. PREVENT COLLISION AT SEA.

Good Prospect for Acceptance of Washington Rules. prance of the Washington rules to preons at sea is reported bright by Savigation Commissioner Chamberiain, who has just returned from an informal consulation with Ambassador Eayard and the British authorities upon the subject.

After the assent of nearly all marnime ma ions to the rules had been secured last year by the United States, Great Britain in February, joined by other powers, asked delay until the rules could be referred to a parliamentary committee. This commitee, which was about to render a generally favorable report, came to an end with the abrupt dissolution of parliament upon the defeat of the late ministry. A new committee must be appointed, and the desire of the United States that the committee be appointed at the present ession of parliament has been clearly inlicated to the British government. Delay in appointing the committee until February nright impede action by Congress, should any be necessary, and it is expected that parliancene will show the same courtesy to session showed to Great Britain.
